Facebook's parent company, Meta, announced on Thursday that it was removing 1,500 fake accounts operated by seven different surveillance companies and alerted roughly 50,000 users that they may have been targeted by "cyber mercenaries."

In a final report titled, “Threat Report on the Surveillance-for-Hire Industry,” following an investigation lasting several months, Meta said that it has taken action against “seven entities providing surveillance-for-hire services to target people across the internet.”

“The global surveillance-for-hire industry targets people to collect intelligence, manipulate and compromise their devices and accounts across the internet,” the report said. “While these ‘cyber mercenaries’ often claim that their services only target criminals and terrorists, our months-long investigation concluded that targeting is in fact _____ and includes journalists, dissidents, critics of authoritarian regimes, families of opposition members and human rights activists.”

The Parker Solar Probe, which launched in 2018, conducted seven flybys of the sun before dipping into the corona during its eighth flyby on April 28, 2021. It made three trips into the sun’s atmosphere, one of which lasted for 5 hours.

In the upper reaches of the solar atmosphere, where temperatures average about 2 million degrees Fahrenheit (1 million degrees Celsius)—hotter than the light-emitting surface of the sun, which is only 10,000 F (5,500 C)—the spacecraft collected atmospheric particles in a special instrument called the Solar Probe Cup. By entering and sampling the sun’s atmosphere, the Parker Solar Probe accomplished a scientific achievement akin to landing on the moon.

Powerful solar winds made of streaming plasma and high-energy particles are born in the corona, but are held back by the sun's magnetic fields, which also restrain bursts of plasma that spurt from the sun's surface. When solar winds exceed a certain speed and extend just past the sun's atmosphere, a location known as the Alfvén point, they can break free of their magnetic restraints. However, scientists didn't know where exactly that point was located.

Now, Parker Solar Probe has answered that question. Prior estimates based on remote images of the corona predicted that the Alfvén point would be found approximately 4.3 million to 8.6 million miles (6.9 million to 13.8 million kilometers) from the solar surface. Parker detected those conditions on April 28, at a distance of about 8.1 million miles (13 million km) above the sun, telling researchers that it had entered the sun's atmosphere for the first time.

17. Which is the most appropriate for the blank?

- ① mostly ② entirely ③ scarcely ④ never

18. According to the passage, which is NOT true about Parker Solar Probe?

- ① It collected samples from the sun's atmosphere with its Solar Probe Cup.
 ② It flew around the sun before entering the solar atmosphere.
 ③ It dipped into the solar atmosphere by going beyond the Alfvén point.
 ④ It proved the previously estimated location of the Alfvén point was mistaken.

19. According to the passage, which is true?

- ① The Alfvén point is where the solar magnetic fields act most strongly.
 ② Parker Solar Probe's achievement is comparable to landing on the moon in that it fetched the sun's surface materials to the earth.
 ③ The sun's magnetic fields activate the corona after all.
 ④ The sun's surface is less hot than the limits of the solar atmosphere far above it.

Although it is called Central Park, New York City's great green space has no "center"—no formal walkway down the middle of the park, no central monument or body of water, no single orienting feature. The paths wind, the landscape constantly shifts and changes, the sections spill into one another in a seemingly random manner. But this "decentering" was precisely the intent of the park's innovative design. Made to look as natural as possible, Frederick Law Olmsted's 1858 plan for Central Park had as its main goal the creation of a democratic playground—a place with many centers to reflect the multiplicity of its uses and users. Olmsted designed the park to allow interaction among the various members of society, without giving preference to one group or class. Thus, Olmsted’s ideal of a “commonplace civilization” could be realized.

20. Which is the reason that the author describes specific park features?

- ① To provide evidence that the park has no center
- ② To present negative aspects of a decentered park
- ③ To demonstrate how large the park is
- ④ To show how well the author knows the park

21. Which is the main idea of this passage?

- ① More parks should be designed without centers.
- ② Olmsted was a brilliant designer.
- ③ Central Park is democratic by design.
- ④ New York City is a democratic city.

22. According to Olmsted’s idea for Central Park, which is the closest in meaning to the underlined part?

- ① exceptional ② inclusive ③ aristocratic ④ trite

The whole point of the new theories of social evolution, most evident in the theory of administered reform, was the separation of historical development from the actions of the majority of men, or even, in its extreme form, from all men. Society, in this view, was an impersonal process, a machine with certain built-in properties. The machine might be described or regulated, but was not, ultimately, within human control. Social change, at its maximum, was the substitution of one group of fitters for another. Social description, at its best, was neutral and mechanical. The process, so to say, would build up, would evolve, and we must watch it, go with it, not get in its modernising way. Any attempt to assert a general human priority, over the process as a whole, is then of course seen as childish: the mere fantasy of revolution.

The extent to which almost all our politics has been reshaped to this mechanical materialism hardly needs emphasis. But what has to be said is that this movement of mind, claiming its origins in reason, was theoretically and factually a mystification of real social activity, and as such _____ reason itself. It thus worked, finally, to the same effect as the other major movement which sought to express the values of the Enlightenment but which seemed for so long to have so different a direction: the whole current of subjectivism and romanticism.

26. Which is the most appropriate for the blank?

- ① originated ② enlarged ③ discerned ④ discredited

27. According to the passage, which is true about the theories of social evolution?

- ① They are not revolutionary.
 ② They have no connection with reform.
 ③ They are not romantic.
 ④ They are not mechanical.

As a hobby, photography provides many benefits for the amateur. First, photography helps the amateur record many family events. For example, photographs capture important family celebrations, such as a wedding, the birth of a baby, a family reunion, or a family member's graduation. Snapshots also record daily events, such as a baby's first steps, the antics of children or pets, or a child's growth. Moreover, these pieces of film give us a glimpse into family history; pictures of grandparents and great-grandparents remind us of our _____. Next, photography allows artistic expression. Because photography is more than the mere capturing of a moment of time, the photographer can use many devices to create the mood or emotion he or she wants to convey. The amateur photographer begins to learn more about the composition of the elements in the photograph, about light, and about color to create the effect he or she seeks. For example, with black and white film, the photographer can create dramatic juxtapositions of shadow and light. The photographer also begins to recognize that the same setting, taken from different angles, yields many different interpretations. Initially, photography can become a lucrative hobby for the amateur. The amateur who develops skill with the camera can enter photography contests to gain either monetary prizes or public recognition of this ability. The amateur may wish to publish some shots in a local newspaper; for example, these shots may accompany a travel article about a local historical landmark. By photographing weddings or portraits of friends and associates, the amateur can also expand this hobby into a part-time business. These benefits make photography more than just owning a camera.

28. Which is the most appropriate for the blank?

- ① adversary ② heritage ③ plight ④ dream

29. Which is NOT appropriate in the context?

- ① Moreover ② Next ③ For example ④ Initially

30. According to the passage, which is NOT one of the benefits of photography as a hobby?

- ① It will develop you to be a professional artist.
② You can be a recorder of family history and events.
③ You can become an amateur artist.
④ It can bring you some money.
